

Central Library Notice: Revised Working Hours and Borrowing Policy

Effective from the start of this semester, the central library will remain open from eight in the morning until ten at night on all working days, and from nine in the morning until six in the evening on weekends and public holidays. These revised hours apply to the main reading halls, the reference section, and the digital resource centre on the second floor.

Borrowing limits have also been revised this semester. Undergraduate students may now borrow up to four books at a time for a period of fourteen days, while postgraduate students and faculty members may borrow up to eight books for a period of thirty days. Renewal of an existing loan is permitted once, provided no other student has placed a reservation on the same title through the library portal.

A fine of two rupees per day will be charged for every book returned after its due date, with the total fine for any single book capped at two hundred rupees regardless of how long the delay continues. Students with unpaid fines exceeding this cap will have their borrowing privileges suspended until the outstanding amount is cleared at the circulation desk.

During the examination fortnight each semester, the main reading room will remain open twenty-four hours a day, including weekends, to support students preparing for their examinations. Students wishing to use the reading room after the normal closing hours during this period must carry their institute identity card, which will be checked at the entrance by the library security staff on duty.

For any queries regarding borrowing limits, fines, or access to the digital resource centre, students may contact the library help desk in person during working hours or send an email to the address listed on the library's page of the institute website.
